Breed Association Contact List

J. Benton Glaze, Jr., University of Idaho

Breed associations provide beef cattle producers a variety of benefits and services. Breed associations work in the areas of breed promotion, marketing, member education, and performance recording. While all services are important, one that receives much attention is performance recording/evaluation of animals.

To remain competitive in the beef cattle industry, producers must continually strive to identify and retain genetically superior animals for use in future generations. To accomplish this task, producers must take advantage of available tools and resources, such as expected progeny differences (EPD). EPDs are an evaluation of an animal's genetic potential (worth as a parent). EPDs are reported in sire summaries, which are published by several breed associations.

Following is a list of breed associations and their contact information. Also, the list contains information about the breeds that have sire summaries and where the sire summaries are generated (ABRI-Australia, CU-Cornell University, CSU-Colorado State University, UGA-University of Georgia, ISU-Iowa State University, and WSU-Washington State University). The N/A notation indicates a sire summary was not available (as of this printing).
